A brother's best friend romance.

Julie Reavis thinks the sorority girls at her expensive Liberal Arts private school are all idiots. For some reason, they've wrongly mislabeled Dylan, her brother Will's long-time best friend as being gay. However, she doesn't mind using their mistake to make Dylan an indecent proposal.

After an embarrassing incident with an incredibly hot frat boy, sexually inexperienced Jules asks Dylan to educate her in the bedroom. In exchange for his help, she'll pretend to be his girlfriend, including throwing in a few PDAs in front of the sorority girls he's been lusting after for months to set the record straight on his sexuality.

Dylan surrenders to the temptation of Jules's offer, and they immediately start off her sex-ed with a bang. Dylan had no idea that the sweet, shy, and innocent Jules he's known almost his whole life is a sexy little exhibitionist, or that he'd instantly become addicted to her. Now, he's irrationally jealous of the frat boy he's supposed to be helping Jules get. Dylan just can't stop thinking about her and their sexual escapades. And suddenly, the idea of Jules "experimenting" with anyone but him between the sheets, in elevators, or in parking lots turns him into a possessive, half-crazed madman.

Despite how much Dylan wants more with Jules, he also knows his best friend will never approve of him going after his little sister.

When a secret Dylan has been keeping from Will and Jules is uncovered and made public, he may end up losing his best friend and the girl he loves for good. He'll have to figure out a way to beg for forgiveness after hurting the two people he'd give away his entire fortune to have.
