If you ask me, foolishness is like beauty - all about the eye of the beholder.

For instance - I've been told the amount of caffeine I consume on a daily basis will eventually kill me, which makes no sense, because that caffeine is essential to living. Then I have doctors telling me that I need to get more sleep if I want to live a happy, healthy life. I can easily refute those claims, because my life is neither happy nor healthy if I don't utilize every possible second of each day to ensure my life's goals are met.

Now I've got people claiming that hooking up with the sexy bodyguard I hired after someone tried to kill me in broad daylight is a mistake. And, okay, they might be right about that one. Even I can't argue that it's not healthy to sleep with someone you can barely stand to be around outside the bedroom.

But you know what? Life is already short enough. If there's a chance I might die young, then I'm going to go out with a bang - preferably the kind that comes with an orgasm or twelve.
